Topazery Showcases Three-Strand Pearl Necklace

ATLANTA, GEORGIA – A three-strand pearl necklace, reminiscent of pearl jewelry worn by Audrey Hepburn in the 1961 film classic “Breakfast at Tiffany’s,” is being showcased within the curated collection of Topazery, one of the Internet’s leading websites for vintage and antique jewelry. Adding to the allure and sophistication of this unique offering is a platinum and diamond bowtie clasp.

“A strand of pearls should be a staple in any woman’s jewelry collection,” said Jan Walden, founder of Topazery. “This three-strand pearl necklace was a real find for us with 165 Akoya pearls, and the black tie treatment of a platinum and diamond clasp. It is truly rare and unique.”

Shaped like a bowtie, the necklace’s box-style closure is accented with a collection of round brilliant and single cut diamonds. The clasp can be worn in the back for a sophisticated, polished daytime look, and then slid around to the front at night to bring on the glamour. The piece is vintage circa 1940.

“We are indebted to Audrey Hepburn for elevating pearls into one of the most sort-after gems,” Walden said. “One of my favorite things about pearls is the fact that you can wear them at the office, with jeans on the weekend or on a night out at a fashionable restaurant. Pearls are a statement of classic fashion, and this three-strand piece is the ultimate.”
